

1. Reflection on Video Presentation

There were benefits to having each member film their portion on their own. Positively, it gave each participant a chance to highlight their unique communication style and strengths. Additionally, it allowed for schedule flexibility, guaranteeing that everyone could contribute whenever it was most convenient for them.

I concentrated on speaking clearly and passionately during my segment filming to make sure the main ideas of our Design Thinking process were conveyed. Because each participant had the chance to directly share their perspective and insights, this method allowed for a closer relationship with the audience.

2. Suggestions for Enhancement

It would be advantageous to create more precise guidelines regarding the tone, pacing, and general presentation style in order to improve the individual filming process in the future. This could contribute to the video's overall feeling of consistency and professionalism.

3. Conclusion and Future Aspirations

Filming the individual presentations on the 26th was a satisfying but difficult experience. It demonstrated our flexibility and the confidence we had in each team member to effectively deliver their material. I see this as a chance for us to continue improving our communication skills and striking a balance between valuing individuality and upholding a strong sense of group dynamics as we go forward.

I hope to use the knowledge I gained from this filming experience in my future endeavours. Future group projects' success will depend critically on developing a common dedication to the overall narrative, enhancing means of communication, and matching presentation styles. In addition to deepening our comprehension of the topic, this stage of our Design Thinking journey has given us invaluable skills in virtual collaboration and presentation.
